NEW ANSWER TO THAT BIGGER DOCTOR'S BILL

New York - When they walk out of the hospital, too many people think their money worries are behind them. Their group insurance may have largely covered the cost of their average eight-day stay. Then, a week or so later, the surgeon's bill arrives - and to most people this is an unpleasant surprise.

According to the Social Security Administration, in the seven years since Medicare and Medicaid have been in operation, personal health care costs for the country as a whole have risen an average of 12½ each year. And, in the last two years physicians' services have jumped by more than 20½.

To help provide more protection against this often overlooked gap in total medical coverage, many people are turning to the rapidly developing "supplemental" insurance policies, among them a new policy called "Surgicare" costing most people only $3.50 per month.

Offered by the 54-year old National Home Life Insurance Company of Valley Forge, Pa., this policy pays various scheduled amounts up to $1,000 for 112 different operations. Proceeds go directly to the policyowner to cover doctor-office operations as well as surgery performed in the hospital.

Other unusual features are that medical exams are not required, and those who respond to newspaper advertising inserts have the right to examine the policy before deciding to join the plan with payment of the first month's premium.
